NO. 2

A Brave Missourian.

The death of Chas. S. Boarman, New Orleans, brother of J. S. Boarman, manager of the Keith & Perry coal works at Deepwater, Henry county, called forth a handome tribute and incident of his life trom a Mobite paper:

During the siege of Port Hudson, t became necessary for the outside suthorities to communicate with the garrison, and Master Boarman was elected to bear the important dispatches to Gen. Gardner, which could only be accomplished by trategy, peril and daring. Having reached Waterproof, on the Mississippi river, he secured a plank, with the assistance of which he floated through the enemy's fleet, and directly under the guns of the Hartford. After having spent several hours on his floating plank he became chilled, and so close was he to the enemy's entinels that he was obliged to rest is chin upon the plank to prevent the chattering of his teeth from betraying his presence under the bows of the ship.

Arriving at his destination, and realizing that he was surrounded by friends whose hearts were true as Southern steel, the recent dangers e momentarily torgotten, and, dst the shouts and acclamations his brave companions in arms, he nodestly handed the gallant and ncible Gen. Frank Gardner the spatches intrusted to his care.

An Owl's Peculiar Trick.

In one of the Bowery museums, in a in cage, is a monster owl, with eyes blg as five-dollar gold-pieces. A looking man wandered from the arpent's den to the owl's cage, and his those of the captive bird. the bird clutched the rod on which it s, with quicker step, and as often as made the circuit of the cage he the doubled over seven fingers an sudant in the museum came up and ated him what it was all about.

"Go 'way," said the man without on around till he had closed the in a most fantastic way to prevent his going out of doors. halted, and still keeping his eyes d on those of the owl, he said:

Methods of an Inventor.

There is a president of a tool-building pany in one of our eastern cities to is a thorough mechanic and a sucal inventor. In one of the draughtgrooms is a table with square, rule, meil, and a few other appliances al-art on it. Perhaps this table may be med three or four times a day by the ent, who will jot down figures, aw a few lines or make a sketch. He not come for several days, and he work at the board or table for hours at a time. At last the is thought out and its clusiveness and by the penciling. The result is properly drawn, patterns are made, stings are finished, and the mais completed. All this is the proof thought-growing, lasting perfor weeks or months. During incubating time the idea possessed inventor in as true a sense as that essed the idea. Probably no rely literary effort required greater aght, or more exercise of the reason judgment.—Boston Budget. to its subject, more intense

WAYS OF NOTED MEN.

Freaks Which in Some Would Have Seemed Like Insanity.

Augustus Hare, one of the cleverest divines in the English Church, when he had ended a train of hard thinking, would rise from the desk and spin around on his heel a few seconds and then resume his studies.

Dr. Johnstone would never enter a certain lane in London without going between two particular posts of which there were four.

Frederick the Great in his youth was noted for his stubbornness and bashfulness, and, we are told, showed this at his sister's marriage. Instead of appearing at the ceremony in court attire he came with the servants dressed as one of their number.

Neander, the famous church historian, was unable to lecture to his students unless he had in his hand a quill pen, which he tore to pieces while he talked and it was always necessary to supply him with a second when the first had been entirely wasted.

Charles II. of England was very fond of hunting insects, and it is related by certain historians that he was hunting a moth in the supper-room at Whitehall when the Dutch fleet sailed up the Thames and burned Sheerness.

Charles Dickens, the famous novelist, was a most untiring walker; he considered it but a trifle to pass over forty or even sixty miles of country. Should a friend visit him a walk was his (Dickens') first proposition. Tradition says in the long run he had few friends spending a whole day with him.

Archbishop Whately was one of the most philanthropic of men, and yet, when dying, he is reported to have said: "I rejoice to think that never in my life have I given a copper to a beggar with whose antecedents I was a stranger."

The Earl of Chatham was most peculiar in his habits; these, no doubt, were engendered by his hypochondriac nature. On one occasion, in midsummer, he wished to have snow, and adopted the following rather curious method of having his wish realized: The servants were ordered to have large fires in every room, the walks outside were covered with salt to make things have a wintry appearance, and doors and windows were kept shut to keep out the bitter cold. How long this whim lasted the historian does not record.

William Wilberforce became so absorbed in conversation in evening comwholly to forget himself. walked around the cage the big, flat | would lift himself from his chair in his of the owl remained fixed upon earnestness, move forward a little, and gradually approach perliously near the edge. I was a tradition in fashionable thed, the eyes neither winked nor English circles that he had fallen several times he made the circles that he had fallen several times to the floor; but in families al times to the floor; but in families attof the cage, keeping his eyes fixed where he was loved it was the custom a those of the owl, then halted, still to station one of the older children being the bird, and a perplexed look | hind his chair to move it forward as he ane over his face. Again he started moved and guard him against peril. Some who afterwards became leaders to English society retained among the pleasantest memories of their childhood the recollection of the services rendered to this brilliant and eloquent converser.

Rossini, the composer of "The Bar-Go 'way," said the man without ber," when engaged with any great great ing his eyes from the owl, and he composition, invariably shaved himself

George IV., King of England, was very feminine in his habits; he possessed scores of embroidered shirts, which were considered by him to be the best department of his wardrobe, and were accordingly displayed with great pomp to any particular friend of his Majesty.

> Edison says that no experiment which he has tried at night ever failed. Now what we want to know is, did Mr. Edison ever try at night to find the matches in his bare feet without disturbing any of the furniture or stubbing his big toe against seventeen different obstructions. -New Haven News.

Origin of a Common Expression.

The funny man of the Texas Siftings perpetrates the following:

"Wilson Barrett (called out after the earthquake scene in 'Claudian')-What do you there, catiff? Surrender that boquet, or by all the gods—
"Stage carpenter—No, you don't cully; I got up that earthquake, and this call is for me."

This stage carpenter met with more appreciation than did the bad playwright, John Dennis, to whom the language is indebted for a piquant expression. Dennis invented for his play. "Appius and Virginia," a new variety of stage thunder which has been used ever since. Hearing it used in "Macbeth" after the failure of his own drama he arose indignantly from his seat in the pit and exclaimed: "They will not let my play run; and yet they steal my thunder."—Buffalo Courier.

"There is my wife," said the duelist to his second, in a voice broken with emotion; "if I am killed she will be left alone in this cold, cold world; but, thank Heaven, I am rich, and if the worst comes to the werst, she will be provided for." "You ought to write her a letter," suggested the second. "I will, and in case I fall will you deliver it?" 'Certainly," responded the second, endeavoring to keep the tears back, "and by the way, old fellow, just say a good word for me."-Life.

HARPER'R YOUNG PEOPLE. AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY,

HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE has been called "the model of what a periodical for young readers ought to be," and the justice of this commendation is amply sustained by the large circulation it has attained both at home and in Great Britain. This success has been reached by methods that must commend themselves to the judgment of parents, no less than to the tastes of chil dren-namely, by an earnest and well sus tained effort to provide the best and most attractive reading for young people at a low price. The illustrations are copious and of a conspicuously high standard of excellence.

except to put something to eat into it, is an excellent motto for the gossip and the sufferer from catarrh. But while the gossip is practicaly incurable, there is no excuse for anyone's suffering longer from catarrh. Dr. Sege's Catarrh Remedy is an unfailing cure for that offensive disease. It heals the diseased membrane, and removes the dull and depressive sensations wich always attend catarrh. A short trial of this valuble preparation will make the sufferer teel like a new being.
